

Come, My Prince®

Come, my Prince, and climb the tower where I dream of you.

Come and stand before me so I may see my inner light reflected in the blazing mirror of your eyes.

Over and over, through all eternity, your love never fails to find me so that I can become myself, whole and loving you back in equal measure.

Bear me away now on your magical dappled gray horse, my arms folded tightly around your waist, nestled into you, my cheek resting against your back.

Together we ride as one, while your horse runs with long strides fearlessly and steadily across the dark Earth, far and deep into the night.

Together we run like two winter foxes across the valley floor, seeking a cave of restfulness while the moon shines brightly on our silvery coats.

We dance as buck and doe, agilely jumping the fallen tree on the forest's path and soaring on our tiny deer feet over swollen rushing streams.

We sail as twin eagles soundlessly in the black sky, seeking our aerie high on the mountain's exalted top.

For we have been all these things.

We have been all creatures that live and creep and swim.

We have been the stars and the wind and the ocean's depths.

We have been all the words of love ever whispered into waiting ears.

Come, my Prince, and take me to your castle keep.

And there make love to me with fierce passion and unimaginable tenderness, as you have in every lifetime.

Ravish me with your unceasing need for me so I may surrender to you over and over again as I have since time began.

And here in your stronghold we will live together as One in joy and harmony.

Come, my Prince.

I wait.
